Walpi, Mishongnovi, Oraibi and Hotevilla, probably because of the Snake Dances held at one or another annually, are the best known villages in the Hopi Indian Reservation which, strangely enough, is entirely surrounded by the vast reaches of the Navajo Reservation. Whereas the Navajos live in hogans widely scattered and frequently change their places of abode, the Hopis have built permanent apartment-like dwellings atop the 500 foot high mesas overlooking their farmlands and the desert beyond.
